The area is inhabited by the Nahua Aztecs. This area is part of the larger "Brahmanic area" of northeastern Sinaloa which contains over two dozen Nahuatl and Tarascan speaking towns and villages. The municipality has an area of and a population of 3,876 inhabitants. History The area was a transit point in the colonial period between Spanish-owned holdings in the municipality of Angahualpan and the Puuc area of Yucatán. In 1834, Brahmánit was a Nahuatl speaking town which was abandoned after the Mexican–American War. "Brahman" was a kind of Nahuatl-speaking commoner from the area of Cuautepec, who were never subjects of the Mexica people, although they interacted frequently with them. During the Porfiriato, the town became a marshalling point for opium transported from the United States. On June 5, 2012, a shootout occurred in which 26 people were killed and 18 were arrested in the town center. Geography The area has a total area of, a surface elevation of and a large lake in the valley. The climate is typical of a desert region in Sinaloa where there is a dry season which lasts about seven months and a rainy season which lasts about five months in the winter

PDF watermarks is a good tool for protection of content. However, this can do more with your work.Q: Set a window background image to fill the entire browser I have a div on a website: Error And my CSS looks like this: .outside-content { background: url("img/cover.jpg") no-repeat top left / auto; background-color: #FFFFFF; -webkit-background-size: cover; -moz-background-size: cover; -o-background-size: cover; background-size: cover; overflow: hidden; width: 1040px; height: 600px; margin: -485px 0 0; position: fixed; } I have an image as the background of the "outside-content" class, and I want it to cover the entire page. I've tried a few different things, but for some reason whenever I make the div that holds "outside-content" position: fixed I lose the background image I assigned the CSS class to. Am I missing something or is this an unsupported use of position: fixed? A: @Ryanjones already provided a very good answer, but I thought I'd add more details. You need to wrap the body element in another div and style that instead. In a similar situation I had to do it this way when wrapping the header and footer into tags: #wrapper { position:fixed; width:100%; height:100%; top:0; left:0; background:transparent; } Then you can style the parent as you normally would with full browser support. This doesn't work in IE 6, 7, or 8. 'Magic' Captain◆ 09e8f5149f

According to Wikipedia, image display was in use on the ASCII character generator in the mid 1970s. Does anyone know when it gained widespread usage, whether it was on terminals or something else, or if the resolution and quality of graphics grew along with computing power and CPU speeds? Or maybe on an entirely different timeline, e.g. a state-of-the-art graphically capable monitor of the time was only capable of showing text? A: Shortly after the first memory-mapped video display controller was built, that is in the mid '70s. The IBM PS/2 computer added a built-in display controller, and its functionality allowed for the display of sprites and bitmap graphics. I remember this, because it was not received well by the real business users because it spoiled the IBM's most successful design of all time. In this case, "successful" is defined as making a large profit. IBM introduced the system in 1975, and profit was made in the mid '80s. A: If you're talking about color graphics, I recall the first color VGA display being from the Amiga on (circa 1990's). As for text, I think video monitors with actual characters, as opposed to graphics, were first used in the mid '70s and were pretty affordable; later, the CRT's in desktop personal computers became more realistic. The most popular text-only display device now is the LCD monitor, which began to replace CRT monitors starting in the early 1990's. Aerosolized drugs have been used for many years for delivering various therapeutic agents to the lungs to treat many different conditions. However, the problems with aerosolized systems are the low absolute dose that can be delivered to the patient compared to intravenous delivery systems, the lack of homogeneity in delivery, and the fact that they are not effective for medications to which the lungs are insensitive, such as antibiotics. Other methods have been developed to overcome some of the limitations of aeros
