For instance, as far as the logs, you don't need to beat the numbers by much. Just enough to make it where, if you don't run the car hard enough to beat the redline, you will see under-engine smoke as the car is running against a limit. If you go way past that, it will just hang and never do it again, or get a "altered" and not "remanufactured" warning. If you are changing tires, just enough to stretch them. If you are changing clutch or flywheel, just enough to make a difference. If you are changing brake pads or rotors, just enough to make a difference, but not so much that it could harm the car if something went wrong.
