The invention relates to the production of steel. More particularly, the invention relates to a method of producing a steel having a low carbon content and lower corrosion resistance. A steel having a low carbon content is preferably produced in the outer zones of the hot- and cold-rolling mills for manufacturing steel strip and for producing continuous band. This is because the presence of a carbon content, even at a low level, in the zone of the temperature ranges from 850° C. to 930° C. and from 500° C. to 650° C. in the case of continuous band has the result that in the case of a steel which has a high carbon content, it is difficult to obtain a satisfactory corrosion resistance in the zones of rapid cooling which are present in the interior of the continuous casting plant for producing continuous band and the rolling mill. However, in the case of a steel having a low carbon content, the presence of a carbon content in the zone of rapid cooling has the result that corrosion resistance is very much impaired. This is because the carbon content in the zone of rapid cooling has the result that intergranular corrosion occurs, particularly in the H-zone of the zone of rapid cooling, to the extent that the standard of corrosion resistance is not met. In order to remedy this situation, German Patent DE-OS 27 38 848 discloses the known method of producing low-carbon steels having corrosion resistance in which a hot-rolling mill is used for processing hot- and cold-rolled strip and in which a cold-rolling mill is preceded by a pre-cooling device, the strip obtained being cooled in the temperature range of from 500° C. to 650° C. in the pre-cooling device in order to prevent

The variations of serum and prostatic fluid testosterone levels in rats injected with hemoglobin solutions of high and low doses were determined to study the possible effect of the drug on the secretion of testosterone. A significant reduction of levels was observed in prostatic fluid after a single injection of 50 mg/kg of Hb. Only moderate effects were detected in serum after the same dose. Lower doses and repeated injections did not change the concentrations of testosterone in either the serum or the prostatic fluid. These results suggest that the effects of the toxin on the peripheral level of testosterone depend on its dose and the times of administration. The occurrence of thyroid peroxidase in normal and tumor tissues of man and experimental animals. Tubulo-epithelial cells of the thyroid and the stomach were recognized as one of the sources of thyroid peroxidase (TPO) in the tissues. These cells do not secrete TPO.
