There are many things that we just "know" or assume about life as a parent and I always say, "the truth is a mystery". I know it's going to take a lot of practice to get this 2 year old to read when she's 4 years old, but I think it's a valuable lesson. Today she was asking me to read the kids' book, "I Like To Light Fire" to her. I know it's way too early to start teaching her the fundamentals of reading because she's only 2, but I'm always looking for new and fun things to do and read with her. If she's going to grow up loving to read she needs to be exposed to books at an early age. The truth is, I want her to be able to read by the time she's 5. I want to encourage her to love to read for all of her life, but, at this point, there's no reason to start now. She loves books and I'm so impressed by how well I think she's doing with this "just because". The other day I let her pick out a book from the pile of books by the front door and while she was reading it I was so impressed by how much I liked the book. It's picture book about a little boy who loves to light fire. It's a simple little story about a boy who loves to light fire, but, he's only 2 years old. I really like this book because I think it's so funny. I love it when my kids laugh and I think she enjoyed it too. She can't read the story yet, but, she's very interested in reading. I asked her if she wanted to hear the story again 6d1f23a050
